An Extract from The Financial Review (Oct 2018) on the Jaguar I-Pace

The I-Pace uses a new architecture Jaguar Land Rover developed for its upcoming electric vehicles. Sales just began around the world. All I-Paces have two electric motors for all-wheel drive, one on each axle. They produce 396 horsepower and 512 pound-feet of torque. The five-passenger I-Pace is a compact SUV. It had a 360-degree camera, adaptive cruise control, 20-inch wheels, 825-watt Meridian audio, leather interior, suede headliner, heated steering wheel, blind-spot assist, lane-keeping assist, navigation, power tailgate and more. At 184.3 inches long, it's 2 inches shorter than Jag's conventionally powered F-Pace SUV.

If you're determined to buy an electric luxury SUV, there's not much competition for the I-Pace. The Tesla Model X is more than a foot longer and costs significantly more when comparably equipped.

The Audi E-tron SUV won't be on sale until the second quarter of 2019 and is 8.7 inches longer. The other announced luxury electric SUV, the Mercedes EQC, isn't due until 2020.

Power and Range

The I-Pace's electric drivetrain delivers impressive performance. Acceleration is head-snapping with a claimed 0-60mp/h (96.6km/h) time of 4.5 seconds, despite the I-Pace's 4857-pound curb weight. That's several hundred pounds more than non-electric SUVs, but 600 pounds lighter than the bigger Tesla X. The I-Pace's weight is distributed 50/50 over the front and rear axles. There's a marked tendency to squat back on its haunches in hard acceleration, despite an air suspension.

Regenerative braking captures power as soon as you release the accelerator, rendering normal braking unnecessary in many cases. The brakes feel more conventional in dynamic mode.

Until they're available, Jaguar predicts a 234-mile range on a charge and 12.9 hours for a full charge at 230 volts. And 10.1 hours should get you an 80 per cent charge of the 90 kWh lithium-ion battery.

Key features on vehicle tested

Standard equipment: Antilock brakes; stability control; air suspension; leather seats and interior trim; push-button start; USB port; automatic climate control; power seats; memory for driver settings; fixed sunroof; 360-degree camera; adaptive cruise control; blind spot alert; lane departure alert; parking assist; traffic sign recognition; navigation; voice recognition; Bluetooth compatible; hill start assist; autonomous emergency braking; emergency brake assist; ash wood veneer; heated steering wheel; 18-way heated and cooled front seats; memory for driver and passenger settings; 825-watt Meridian audio; 20-in. split-spoke wheels; Options: None.
